When someone has helped you, but has perhaps not done all that you requested, focus on what the person has done, not on what he hasn't. Although this would seem to be morally obvious, many people are so caught up with their own that they ignore the good done for them.

A teacher once received a letter from a student, asking fourteen unrelated questions on a variety of subjects. The teacher wrote back a long reply in which he dealt with thirteen of the questions. He soon received a return letter from the student, who not only noted the omission, but expressed no thanks for what the teacher had written. Though the teacher was a man of great patience, he was hurt by the student's behavior: "Not only was there no word of thanks, but at the beginning of your letter you reminded me that there was one of your questions to which I forgot to give an answer. Was that the proper beginning and response to a letter of ten pages?" He went on to tell the student: "I mention this not because I need your thanks, but because of my love for you and concern that you should not become a person who denies the good done for him."

(A) Once in a village lived a rich man. He had many slaves and servants for work. The rich man was very unkind and cruel to them. One day one of the slaves made a mistake while cooking food. (a)He overcooked the food. When the rich man saw the food, he became angry and punished the slave. He kept the slave in a small room and locked it from outside.

(B) After a few days the lion recovered. The slave and the lion became very close friends. A few days went by but one day the slave was caught by one of the guards of the rich man. The guard took (b)him to the rich man, who decided to punish him severely. The rich man ordered guards to put him in the lion's cage.

(C) Somehow the slave escaped from that room and ran away. (c)He went to a forest. There he saw a lion. Instead of becoming afraid of the lion and running away, he went close to the lion. He saw the lion was injured and one of his legs was bleeding. The slave searched for herbs to cure the lion's wound and took care of the lion.

(D) The whole village got the news about it and came to see. As soon as the slave was locked in the lion's cage, the lion came near (d)him and started licking his hand and hugged him. It was the same lion that the slave had helped in the forest. Seeing this, everyone was surprised. The rich man thought that the slave was such a great person that the lion didn't kill him. (e)He freed the slave, made him his friend and started to treat all his servants and slaves better.

Look out! It's a dodder! A dodder is a plant that spends its whole life (A) other plants. How does the dodder do this? First, you must understand how plants live. Plants have roots that grow into the ground. There they get water and minerals. Plants also have leaves which absorb, or soak up, sunlight. The leaves use the sunlight to make food inside the plant. Therefore, the two most important parts of a plant are its roots and leaves.

The dodder does not have roots and leaves. The dodder cannot make its own food, so it steals the food from other plants! How? A dodder seed falls to the ground. If there is enough warmth and rain, it sprouts. If not, the dodder seed (B) . It can do so for five years and still sprout! Finally, the dodder seed sprouts. It sends out a tiny, yellowish "thread."

The thread finds another plant, such as a clover. The dodder winds itself around the stem of the clover. Around and around it winds, tighter and tighter. The dodder has found a victim! Now the dodder plant sucks the juices from the clover plant. The clover plant has to make food for itself and for the dodder. This makes the clover plant weaker. Sometimes it gets so weak that it dies. Then the dodder must go off looking for some other plant to rob.

(A) Lisa loved to read. Every time her Mom took her to the bookstore, she would buy two books. By the time she went to bed, Lisa had already read one of them. One day, Mom said to Lisa, “I think we need to get you your own library card.” “Wow!” cried Lisa. “I’ve always wanted a library card.” The next day after school, Mom took Lisa to the library to get (a) her a card. The lady at the desk asked Mom to fill out a paper and then asked Lisa to write her name.

(B) Then Mom said, “Let’s go back to the library and get those books you wanted.” “Sounds great,” said Lisa. While they were in the library, Mom told Lisa that the girl who found (b) her card was sitting at the round table. Lisa went over to her and said, “Thank you for finding my card.” She told Lisa she was glad to help, and they both looked for some books together. Lisa had her books, her card, and a new friend, too!

(C) Lisa left the library feeling very sad and also worried what her Mom would say when (c) she told her she lost her card. When Lisa got home, Mom told Lisa that a girl came to the house with her library card, saying (d) she found it on the sidewalk near the library. “You were lucky that girl found your card,” said Mom. “You need to be very careful.” Lisa said, “I think I will keep it in my wallet.”

(D) She then told Lisa how many books she could borrow on her card. Lisa was so excited! She could hardly wait to search the many shelves of books. Her favorite books were ones that took (e) her to faraway places. The next day, she went to the library to check out some books. However, when Lisa got to the desk, she didn’t have her card. “Oh, no!” Lisa said to the lady at the desk. “I can’t find my library card!” “I’m sorry,” said the lady. “I can’t let you take any books without your card.”

There was a hunter who had a special breed of “bird dog.” The dog was the only one of its kind, as it could walk on water. One day he invited a friend to go hunting with him so that he could show off his prized possession. After some time, they shot a few ducks, which fell into the water. The man ordered his dog to fetch the birds. The dog ran on water to fetch them. The man expected _____ from his friend, but he did not get one. Being curious, he asked his friend if he had noticed anything unusual about the dog. The friend replied, “Yes, I did see something unusual about your dog. Your dog can’t swim!”

Every day we have to face, work with, or even live with people who display more negative tendencies than positive ones. They are always complaining, criticizing, and talking about all the negatives in life. They are world champions in spreading fear, broadcasting gossip, or chasing people away; they choose to look at the holes in the middle rather than the whole doughnut. They are the people who won't pull you out of your present situation but rather push you down. So be aware of them, spend less time with them, and do not let them steal your dreams away from you.

(A) In April 1952, Alice, my first daughter, was 11 years old and in the sixth grade at William Cleveland Elementary School. (a) Her teacher was Ada Pemberton. That year, there was a spelling bee in the city. Students were preparing for the classroom spell-downs. They would lead to a schoolwide contest and eventual qualification for the citywide bee, where school winners competed for the honor of being the spelling champion of Houston.

(B) After each practice, Ms. Pemberton would take her to Rettig's ice cream parlor. They practiced every weekend until the citywide spelling bee with all the school champions from the Houston Independent School District. Alice did not win the citywide bee, but she still felt proud to have participated. (b) She also felt grateful that she had such a caring teacher in elementary school.

(C) The day before the classroom spelling bee, my youngest son was playing with matches and accidentally set a fire in our apartment. Fortunately, the fire was put out soon with the help of the quick fire fighters. I called the school in the next morning to inform Ms. Pemberton of the accident, knowing that the class spelling bee was that day. When Alice arrived at school, Ms. Pemberton pulled (c) her aside.

(D) (d) She asked if Alice wanted the spelling bee to be postponed to another day. Alice told her no. That day, she won the bee for her classroom. The next week was the school spelling bee, with classroom champions competing. (e) She won again! The citywide spelling bee was one month away. Every Sunday, Ms. Pemberton would pick up Alice, and they would go to her house, where she would help Alice practice by calling out spelling words.

As a scientist, you may find it challenging to present your work, or to explain scientific concepts, to a nonspecialized audience. When you are addressing nonspecialized audience members, it is a good idea to convey early the motivation for the work you report so that they can understand it. That is, you must bridge the gap between what they know or are interested in and what you will present. With nonspecialists, this gap is wider than with specialists. You might find it harder to convey the motivation for your work.

In addition, nonspecialists are not good at comparing facts. An absolute value, such as a power consumption of 5 megawatts, might be clear to you and other scientists, but nonspecialists might not know whether that is a small or a large amount for the device being described, and they might not even know whether it is a little or a lot in general. You can suggest that the power consumption is low or high by saying something like “as little as 5 megawatts” or “as much as 5 megawatts,” but it is more helpful to communicate points in the form of a , as in “30 percent less than the most economical device currently” or “three times the average power consumption of devices of type X.”

He found the boy's father, John, in the hall waiting for the doctor. On seeing (a) him, the dad yelled, “Why did you take all this time to come? Don't you know that my son's life is in danger?”

(B) “Why is he so busy? (b) He didn't wait so that I could ask about my son's state,” John remarked to the nurse a few minutes after the doctor left. Tears running down her face, the nurse responded: “His son died yesterday in a car accident. He was at the burial when we called (c) him for your son's surgery. And now that he's saved your son's life, he ran out to finish his son's burial.”

(C) The doctor smiled again and replied, “Please go and pray for your son, and I'll do my best for (d) him.” The surgery took about three hours, after which the doctor came out looking satisfied, and said to the boy's father, “Thank goodness! Your son is saved!” Without waiting for John's reply he hurried out of the hospital, saying “If you have any questions, ask the nurse!”

(D) (e) He smiled lightly and said, “I am sorry, but I wasn't in the hospital, and I came to the hospital as soon as I received the call. And now, I wish you'd calm down so that I can do my work.” “Calm down? What if your son was in this room right now? Would you calm down? If your own son died, what would you do?” said John angrily.

One day a group of frogs were traveling through the woods, and two of them fell into a deep hole. All the other frogs gathered around the hole. When they saw how deep the hole was, they told the two frogs that they were as good as dead. The two frogs ignored the comments and tried to jump up out of the hole as hard as they could. The other frogs kept telling them to stop, and that they were as good as dead. Finally, one of the two frogs paid attention to what the other frogs were saying and gave up. He fell down and (A) . The other frog continued to jump as hard as he could. Once again, the crowd of frogs yelled at him to stop the pain and just die. He jumped even harder and finally made it out. When he got out, one of the frogs in the crowd came over to him and asked, “My brother frog, we were yelling at you to give up. We laughed at you. Yet, you continued jumping until you got out of the hole. Why didn’t you give up like the other frog?” The freed and tired frog said, “I’m new to this pond, and I never told anyone that I was a little (B) . While I was trying to jump out, I couldn’t really understand what you all were saying. But I saw your mouths keep moving. (A) On a fine June morning, Jack Kenwood was on his way to a job interview at a bicycle manufacturing factory. The factory was located in the suburbs. A two-lane road ran to the factory, which meant that if there is something moving slowly in front of (a) him, there is no chance to pass. That morning a man was riding a bike in front of Jack, riding uphill.

(B) Part of him wanted to beep, too. But Jack said to himself, "Calm down, man. I have forty minutes left. I can arrive there on time." (b) He didn't want to threaten the biker by beeping or driving past him. Now, they were on top of the hill and the biker stopped and went off the road. It seemed that (c) he would take a rest. Jack drove past and arrived at the factory. Since he arrived about twenty minutes before the interview, he waited in the hallway, reading his memo for the interview.

(C) His car was traveling under fifteen miles per hour, at times at a standstill, as the man pedaled onward. The hills got steeper and windier. The biker had to slow, which meant Jack nearly had to stop. It seemed like forever. To Jack, the trip to the factory was a great test of (d) his patience. Some people beeped behind him and drove past him, taking the lane of the other side of the road.

(D) When he went into the interview room, three people were sitting there. To his surprise, one of the interviewers was the biker! He smiled at (e) him and said, "What a coincidence! Thank you for not beeping behind me." The man was the owner of the factory and he was testing his factory's new bike. He offered him a supervisor's position, which Jack happily accepted. Jack got the job partly because he showed he could slow down and be patient.

A woman said that she was furious and frustrated that her husband loved to go out to lunch, rather than allow her to make it for him. To her, this choice was an unnecessary waste of money that was threatening their financial future. After all, she correctly pointed out, "He might spend seven or eight dollars going out, whereas I can make a delicious lunch for less than three." Her husband's position was quite different. To him, going out to lunch was one of the few things he loved to do for himself, a luxury he felt he could easily afford. He felt enormous pressure all day long at work, and getting away during his lunch hour to a quiet cafe or restaurant seemed to bring him peace of mind. It was something he looked forward to on a daily basis, and clearly, he wasn't going to give it up without a fight.

Obviously, this example could easily have been reversed. You may think this woman's perspective is a great way to save money, which it certainly can be. However, in this instance, this issue was causing great between them and was interfering with their love for one another. While it is good to save money for their finances, it would be better for the woman to drop the issue and make the decision to share in her husband’s joy. Sure, the extra money would be nice, but isn’t it more important to find simple ways to bring joy to your partner?

(A) Once a teacher and his student went out for a walk. After walking a while they reached a farm, where the student saw a pair of old, torn shoes. They belonged to a poor farmer who was just preparing to get back to his home after a whole day of hard work. The student said, “Master, why don’t we hide these shoes behind the bushes and wait for the farmer to come? It would be fun to watch (a) his reaction!”

(B) The farmer finished his work and came to the place where (b) he had left his shoes. As he slipped his foot into one of his shoes he felt something hard in the shoe. When he checked he found the coins. The farmer was surprised to see the coins, and he took them out of the shoe. (c) He started to look around to see if someone was looking for them or it belonged to someone. But he didn’t see anyone so he put the coins in his pocket.

(C) The teacher thought for a moment and then with a smile on his face he said, “Son, I have a better idea. Why don’t we just put some coins in each of his shoes and hide behind the bushes and then see how the farmer will react when he find these coins in his torn shoes?” The student just wanted to see the reaction of the poor farmer so (d) he did what his teacher asked him to do. And then they both hid behind the bushes to see the farmer’s reaction.

(D) After that, the farmer slipped his foot into his other shoe. He again felt something hard in his shoe. When (e) he checked he found some more coins. After seeing all those coins, tears came to the farmer’s eyes. The farmer looked toward the sky and said, “Oh, God, thank you for that unknown helper who helped me in this time of need. Because of that person, now I will be able to buy medicine for my sick wife and will be able to get bread for my hungry children.” The student felt ashamed of himself when he saw the farmer’s reaction.

You have to actually do it to get (A) . I don't care how great a course you attend or how great a life coach you find. Unless you actually apply the information, you'll never get anywhere. Even with the best training materials and coaches, there will be a learning curve to overcome. The only way to overcome the learning curve is to use what you learn and apply it. Unfortunately, there's no shortcut. For example, I can give you all the information on how to drive a car, all the do's and don'ts, and all the secrets I've learned over the years as a driver. But none of this information will be of any use to you even if you read it 100 times over. (A) There lived a prince who did not like to study. He enjoyed playing games. The king announced a reward of one thousand gold coins to the person who could educate his son. Many tutors came to teach him but failed. The prince had an old servant whose son, named Sohan, looked after the king's pigeons. Sohan one day told the king that (a) he would like to teach the prince. The king agreed as even the prince was very fond of Sohan.

(B) The prince then told Sohan there were 40 grey and 60 white pigeons. Then Sohan suggested, "Why don't we give them names?" The prince gladly agreed. Sohan then chose names that began with a vowel for the grey pigeons. Then (b) he chose names that began with a consonant for the white ones. The prince thus learned not only the alphabet but also all the names!

(C) For a few days, Sohan did not teach the prince anything. (c) He just showed the prince how to feed and train the pigeons. The prince helped Sohan to look after the royal pigeons. One day the prince asked Sohan how many pigeons (d) he took care of. Sohan replied, "One hundred." Then the prince asked, "Do we have more of the white pigeons or the grey ones?" Sohan said, "Let us count them and find out." This is how Sohan taught the prince how to count.

(D) Then Sohan said, "Let us make a list of the names of all the pigeons for the king." Gradually, the prince learned to write. The king was very glad to see the list of names that his son had written. Sohan was given the reward of a thousand gold coins. The prince then started going to school. Slowly, (e) he developed an interest in studying and became an excellent student.

With thousands of websites, television channels, text messages, and phone calls, it is easy to become drowned in a flood of media. We often try to absorb too much in too many ways, to enjoy music while at the same time e-mailing someone on our laptops and being interrupted by constant messages on our mobile phones. Is there any one thing I have learned to help me survive? Yes. Try to stick to one type of media at a time.

To a large extent we have a very limited ability to focus. If we try to absorb too many things at once, they often conflict. Just the action of talking takes up much of our working memory. Trying to talk about complex subjects and drive well at the same time pushes our abilities to their limits. This is one of the reasons why people still go to cinemas for good films; it is a(n) experience because all mobile phones are switched off. Many forms of communication are only really enjoyed one at a time.

(A) It was evening when I landed in Kuching, Malaysia. I felt alone and homesick. I was a 19-year-old Dubai-raised kid away from home for the first time to start my university studies in mechanical engineering. I took my luggage and headed to the airport exit. I looked around and found my driver waiting for me in front of (a)his gray van with the name of my university on it.

(B) With a sigh of relief, I took my wallet and thanked him. I could imagine a horrible scenario if he had not returned it. The man welcomed me to Kuching and drove away. As my driver dropped me off, (b)he smiled and wished me luck with my university studies. Thanks to the kindness of these strangers, the initial doubt I had had about my decision to study away from home was replaced with hope and excitement.

(C) This continued more aggressively and my driver started to panic. Honks and more flashes followed, so (c)he pulled the van over to the roadside. My heart was pounding as the man from the car behind approached us. As he reached my window, I lowered it and then looked down at (d)his hands to see that he was holding my wallet. I had left it in the airport and I realized he had been trying to return it to me ever since we had left the airport.

(D) As we left the airport, he began talking about the city and its people. As I loved driving very much, we moved onto talking about cars and driving in Kuching. “Never make Kuching people angry,” (e)he warned. “No road rage. Very dangerous!” He then went on to list his experiences of road rage and advised me to drive very cautiously. A bit later, the car behind started to flash its lights at us.

“You know, that guy. I can see him in my head, but can’t remember his name.” Do you find yourself saying that too often? Is it hard for you to remember names and faces, and when you meet people for the second time you don’t remember meeting them the first? The following will give you memory clues and help you to remember names when you meet people.

(A) . You can only remember what you observe in the first place. If you are distracted or if you aren’t paying attention, you won’t register the person’s name so you can’t possibly remember it. Pay attention to the person’s name when you first hear it.

Ask for the spelling. If the name is not familiar to you, get its spelling to confirm that you have heard the name correctly. Many people are hesitant about asking for the spelling. Don’t be. People like it when you take an interest in them.

Connect. You can link a person’s name to his appearance or features. For example, you meet a tall gentleman named John at a party. You associate his height with his name and think of him as Long John or even Long John Silver.

(B) . When you are first introduced to someone, use their names several times when you talk to them. “Hi, Jim, nice to meet you. So, what do you do for a living, Jim? Do you have any kids, Jim? Jim, it was great to meet you!” Saying it immediately will help you remember it when they walk away.

(A) Jackson was lying on his bed, gently touching the head of the cute little dog that was lying next to him. (a) He looked at the shiny little nose and smooth hair and felt so much love for the dog that you would think they'd been together for years. But the truth is that he had only found him that afternoon, all sad and lonely, wandering the streets.

(B) Reluctantly Jackson got up and picked up the soft little body. (b) He walked out the front door and turned toward the house where he had seen a PUPPIES FOR SALE sign a few months before. For the first time he admitted to himself that he actually knew where the dog had come from. For a few hours he had only pretended not to know. When a boy in a wheelchair opened the front door, the dog jumped from Jackson's arms and started licking his owner's face. Jackson knew that (c) he had done the right thing.

(C) Jackson knew that (d) he had to go and find the dog's owner, but he'd always wanted to have a dog of his own! And this cute little dog had just showed up today. Perhaps this was an answer to all his prayers? Maybe the dog wasn't happy with his real owner. But the healthy, shining fur told another story. The dog was obviously well looked after and probably very happy with his owner.

(D) But why didn't they look after him properly? he thought rebelliously. If I had a dog like this, I would watch him night and day! The dog made a slight whining noise, as though (e) he agreed with Jackson. Jackson knew that his parents wouldn't let him get away with this. They were honest people who would do all they could to ensure that the pet got back to his real owner.

Successful innovations result from trying lots of approaches to solving a particular problem and keeping what works. This results in a large number of unexpected outcomes and discarded ideas. If you aren't throwing away a large percentage of your ideas, then you aren't trying enough options. Consider the fact that only a tiny percentage of the roughly 200,000 patents that are issued each year in the United States lead to commercial success. According to Richard Maullsby of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, "There are around 1.5 million patents in effect and in force in this country, and of those maybe 3,000 are commercially workable." However, this still means that there are 3,000 successful products. Without an environment that supports the development of those that didn't succeed, the viable innovations would likely not see the light of day. The renowned entrepreneur and investor Vinod Khosla says that his firm, Khosla Ventures, invests in projects that have a 90 percent chance of _____. The probability of success for each venture is really low, but if the technology works, it will literally change the world. He is willing to absorb the cost of nine strikeouts in return for one grand slam.

One advertising strategy is to use social identity. The idea is that you will prefer a product that appeals to your identity. No doubt you have seen the TV ads on reverse mortgages, where a clearly older celebrity promotes the company's service. You are supposed to be persuaded by the ad because you can identify with such a person. He's a senior, you're a senior. He's a star, and you can imagine how great it might feel if you were one. In other words, your personal identity is wrapped up in how responsive you are to a given ad. This same principle is at work in ads that use beautiful models to sell clothes and star athletes to sell athletic gear.

Social identity can be threatened when the ad presents events, information, or choices in a way that is inconsistent or negative. A senior, for example, would not be persuaded to consider reverse mortgages if the salesperson were a young and gorgeous model. Recent studies show that these kinds of cognitive interfere with how consumers interpret advertising messages. Advertisers certainly don't want to create ads that threaten identity because consumers will be automatically motivated to forget the ads. It's a defense mechanism. Naturally, the effect is greatest in people who have the strongest in-group identities. That's why advertisers have to be really careful in ads that involve such emotional matters as gender, race, religion, or political belief.

(A) A local business was looking for an employee. They put a sign in the window saying: "WANTED: Must be able to type, must be good at a computer, and must be bilingual. We are an Equal Opportunity Employer." A short time afterwards, a dog named Wise walked up to the window, saw the sign, and went inside. (a) He looked at the receptionist and wagged his tail, then walked over to the sign, looked at it, and whined.

(B) By this time the manager was totally speechless! He looked at the dog and said, "I realize that you are a very intelligent dog and have some outstanding abilities. However, I still can't give you the job." The dog jumped down and went to a copy of the sign and put his paw on the part about being an Equal Opportunity Employer. The manager said, "Yes, but the sign also says that you have to be bilingual." (b) He looked him straight in the face and said, "Meow." Hearing this, the manager had no choice but to hire him.

(C) Seeing the dog, the receptionist took him to the office manager. The office manager met (c) him and was too surprised to say anything. However, Wise looked determined, so he led him into the office. Inside, Wise jumped up on the chair and stared at the manager. The manager said, "I can't hire you. The sign says you have to be able to type." He jumped down, went to the typewriter and proceeded to type out a perfect letter.

(D) He took out the letter, walked over to the manager and gave it to him, and then jumped back on the chair. (d) He was really surprised, but then told Wise, "The sign says you have to be good at a computer." He jumped down again and went to the computer. He demonstrated (e) his expertise with various programs and analyzed the sales reports for August and September, giving the data to the manager.

It's sad that perhaps the person most of us pay the least attention to and shower the least amount of love upon is ourselves. When we are kind, and take time for ourselves, we have something left over for other people. If we don't love ourselves, we can't offer much in the way of love to others. When it comes to kindness, it all starts with you. Here are two ways to be there for yourself.

First, avoid destroying yourself with self-defeating thoughts as "I can't do it" and "I haven't been a very good friend (partner, parent, child, etc.)." When you start paying attention to what you are thinking, you may be shocked at how often you think negatively about yourself. Drop these destructive thoughts from your mind and then pat yourself on the back. All of us have self-esteem that kicks in as soon as we stop being (A) on ourselves.

The second way is to reserve time just for yourself. Whether it's time spent in reading, regular exercise, or making a trip to your favorite bookstore, it's important that you find time to do nice things just for yourself. Acknowledge that you deserve special treatment and that you have earned the kindness that you try so hard to give to others. Far from being (B), your loving-kindness toward yourself will cause your natural instinct to want to give that love back to others.

(A) In India, there is a famous legend about a young boy named Ganesha. Ganesha was nice and sweet, even though (a) he had a big head and a fat little body. His mother, Parvati, loved him. One day Ganesha and his elder brother, Shanmukha, were fighting over a peach. Their parents, Shiva and Parvati, were annoyed with the boys.

(B) Shiva gave the signal to start. Shanmukha flew off on his peacock and raised a cloud of dust. Off he was on his amazingly fast flight around the world. Ganesha looked at up his parents and smiled. Then he slowly rode his little mouse and went around his parents seven times. Then (b) he bowed to them and put out his hand for the peach. "What? Ganesha, you haven't even begun your journey yet!" laughed Parvati.

(C) But Ganesha bowed again and said, "Mother and Father, you are the whole world to me. (c) I just turned around you. Thus I have turned around the whole world." Parvati and Shiva laughed and said, "Son, you are wise. Yes, the peach is yours." And when Shanmukha came flying in, he had to laugh, too, at the wisdom of his brother. Although (d) he had lost the contest, he had had a really great flight around the world.

(D) Their father, Shiva, said: "Why don't we solve this with a contest? You two boys can race around the world. Whoever gets back first may have the peach." The brothers thought this was a great idea. Shanmukha climbed onto his large peacock ready to go. Ganesha thought for a moment, and (e) he climbed upon his tiny mouse. Parvati watched her sons and smiled.

Without a doubt, dinosaurs are a popular topic for kids across the planet. Something about these extinct creatures from long ago seems to hold almost everyone's attention, young or old, boy or girl. Though we don't know a lot about dinosaurs, what we do know is fascinating to children of all ages. But why? "I think the reason kids like dinosaurs so much is that dinosaurs were big, were different from anything alive today, and are extinct. So they are imagination engines," explains Jack Horner, a technical advisor for the Jurassic Park films.

Teachers all over the country would agree. Dinosaurs are studied in classrooms each year, not only for the science behind the topic, but also because of the thinking it seems to foster in students. "The best part about this is what happens with their writing," Jennifer Zimmerman, a primary school teacher in Washington, D.C., says. "I think it's the mystery of dinosaurs—the fact that there are still so many things we don't know—that inspires them to use that topic in their journals." Children also feel powerful when asked to draw a dinosaur. Since no one knows what colors dinosaurs actually were, a child can use what information he has—and his imagination—to draw a dinosaur as he sees it.

(A) A long time ago, there was a boy. He was smart, talented, and handsome. However, he was very selfish, and his temper was so difficult that nobody wanted to be his friend. Often, (a)he got angry and said hurtful things to people around him.

(B) The number of nails the boy drove into the fence each day gradually decreased. Eventually, the boy started to understand that holding his temper was easier than driving nails into the fence. (b)He didn't need the hammer and nails anymore when he learned to hold his temper. He went to his father and shared (c)his achievement. "Now every time you hold your temper all day long, pull out one nail."

(C) Much time passed. At last, the boy was proud of himself as all the nails were gone. He found his father and explained this. Together, they went to the fence, and (d)he said, "You did a good job, my son, but pay attention to the holes left from the nails. The fence will never be the same. The same happens when you say hurtful things to people. Your words leave scars in their hearts like those holes in the fence."

(D) The boy's parents were concerned about his bad temper. One day, the father had an idea. He called his son and gave (e)him a hammer and a bag of nails. The father said, "Every time you get angry, take a nail, and drive it into that old fence as hard as you can." The fence was very tough, and the hammer was heavy. Nevertheless, he was so furious that during the very first day he drove in 37 nails.

It was a mild summer day in Raleigh-Durham, North Carolina when I boarded a flight to Washington, D.C. As usual, I immediately located my window seat, with no doubts that the pilots would safely take me to my destination. Suddenly, as I sat looking out of the window waiting for take-off, certain questions arose in my mind. I wondered, “Who are these pilots that I wholeheartedly entrust with my life?” I wondered about my surety of knowing that they would, or could take me to my destination. I also thought about “Why is it that I — or we as individuals— trustingly allow others to continuously pilot our lives without questions?”

We permit other people to pilot our lives while we unquestionably find our seat near the window— just watching — watching our lives quickly pass by. We lack faith in ourselves, because too often, we allow other people such as our bosses, friends, family, and even enemies, to navigate our lives. We allow them to pilot our lives because of their negative words. We allow them to pilot our lives because they claim to know what is best for us. We live on autopilot without knowing where we are headed, or how we will get there.

We must declare that we will no longer allow others to pilot our lives or our future. No matter how cloudy things look, no matter how dark our past is, we must remember that we are in . We must be our own pilot. Declare today “I will no longer sit back and allow others to lead my life into an uncertain and discontented future.”

(A) Allen was a sixth grader who hated tests. He always felt sick on a test day. Even though he did pretty well in his daily study time, when the teacher gave a test, he always scored poorly. He couldn't figure out why he failed each exam until he talked about it with his mother. (a) He had just brought his report card home. His mother looked it over, shook her head, and asked him why he got a D in math. “You know how to add, subtract, multiply, and divide. Why did you get such a low grade?”

(B) Fortunately, Allen had a good teacher. She knew that (b) he wasn't the only student in her class struggling with tests. So she introduced some games to teach them how to do better on tests. Before they even started the games, she taught them that tests were like sports, where you get a chance to show what you know. That idea was an eye opener for Allen, who had never thought of tests as games in which you competed against yourself and others as you do in computer games, basketball, or other sports.

(C) Allen felt bad about getting the D and was embarrassed to have his mother see his poor report card. He said, “I do pretty well in math when I do my workbooks each day, but I can't seem to get it right when I take my weekly tests. The teacher says I have to do better on my tests if I want to raise my grades, but I hate tests!” “I guess you're just like your dad,” his mother told him. “He didn't do well on tests, either. (c) He had the same problem you have — he always did well until it came to a test.” “So that's it,” Allen thought to himself. “Like father, like son. I may as well quit trying.”

(D) Also, his teacher emphasized that tests are a part of life. If you want to get a driver's license, you have to take a test. To go to college or to get a job, you have to take tests. For the rest of the school year, Allen learned test-taking techniques. Soon (d) he learned to have fun competing with himself. Then he found himself not only doing well on tests but also enjoying them. He even found his scores on his regular weekly tests getting higher and higher, and this showed on his next report card. He could hardly wait to show it to his mother. (e) He handed her his report card saying, “Look, I got a C+ in math this time. And all my other grades are higher, too.”

Yesterday while I was busy doing my housework, my daughter ran up to me and said, “Mommy, there’s a man at the gate.” I told her to ask who it was. It was an old beggar. I heard my daughter yelling, “Mommy, he wants money.” For a second I ignored her, but then it hit me what she had just said. I found my daughter taking out money from her dad’s wallet. Instead of stopping her, I stood there amazed at her action and the realization: kids give without a second thought. Then I murmured a little prayer to myself, “Let my kids never outgrow such a value and let that value grow on us adults.” As I witnessed yesterday, kindness requires no thought. Kindness should be shown without thinking and acted on at that very moment, when you feel it. I know it might sound impossible to be kind all the time. I also know many think kindness should be given to those who deserve it and need it. But really, who deserves and needs kindness? We all do. The whole world does. “No kind action ever stops with itself. One kind action leads to another. Good example is _____. A single act of kindness throws out roots in all directions, and the roots spring up and make new trees. The greatest work that kindness does to others is that it makes them kind themselves.”

(A) Once upon a time there were two brothers. They started to venture from town to town and from village to village to seek happiness. Along the way, they saw (a) an old man with a white beard heading towards them. The old man stopped and asked the boys where they were headed.

(B) “I want it,” hastily answered the big brother and the old man gave him the gem. Then the old man put down the sack he was carrying on his back and said: “Now who is going to help (b) me bring this sack to the village?” The big brother said nothing. On the other hand, the little brother pulled up his sleeves and bended down to help him.

(C) The old man smiled and said: “Take it with you, my boy, along with everything that is inside.” The little brother said, “No, it’s not mine.” “Take it, take it,” said the old man. “It’s my gift to you.” The little brother opened the sack. And what did (c) his eyes see? The bag was filled with precious gemstones. He stood up to thank the old man, but he was nowhere to be found.

(D) When he found out where the boys were going, (d) he told them: “I want to help you.” He put his hand in his pocket and pulled out a handful of golden coins. “Which one of you wants these?” (e) he asked. “I want them,” replied the big brother immediately. The old man put his hand in his other pocket and pulled out a precious gem, shining like the sun, and asked again: “Which one of you wants to have the gem?”

Perhaps no word in the English language carries more baggage than values. People throw around terms such as moral values, traditional values, family values, and American values with little thought as to what they actually mean. Sociologically speaking, a value is a standard of judgment by which people decide on desirable goals and outcomes. Values represent the general basis on which our lives and the lives of others can be judged. They (A) the social rules that determine how we ought to behave. For instance, laws against theft clearly reflect the value we place on personal property.

Values within a society don’t, however, necessarily play an absolute role in every matter that it faces. They, quite frequently, come into conflict among contemporary people living in the society. The value of privacy and the value of generosity may clash when we are trying to decide whether to help a stranger who seems to require assistance. Similarly, although the value of cooperation is held in high esteem in current U.S. society, when someone is taking a final exam in a sociology class, cooperation is likely to be defined as cheating and result in some confusion. When the key values that characterize a particular social institution come into conflict, the result may be widespread legal and moral (B) among individuals.

(A) Through the first three rounds of the 1996 Masters Golf Tournament, Greg Norman held a wide lead over his nearest rival, the Englishman Nick Faldo. Norman was the best player in the world and confident of his winning. At the ninth hole, (a) he was paired with and played with Faldo. In front of the pin, there was a steep slope. Faldo shot first, and the ball landed safely on the green, well past the cup.

(B) Faldo had begun the day six strokes behind Norman. By the time the two started their slow walk to the last hole, Faldo had a four-stroke lead. But he took those final steps quietly, keeping his head low. He understood what had happened on the greens and fairways that day. He understood that what (b) he had earned was something less than a victory and what Norman had suffered was something less than a defeat.

(C) Norman was next. (c) He swung and then froze. His club flew into the air, following the ball in flight. The ball was short. Norman watched, stone-faced, as the ball rolled back down the hill. At the next hole, he hooked the ball to the left, hit his third shot well past the cup, and missed an easy putt. And then, he hit the ball straight into the water, resulting in (d) his third straight bogey.

(D) When it was all over, Faldo approached Norman and wrapped his arms around him. “I don’t know what to say — I just want to give (e) you a hug,” he whispered, and then he said the only thing he could say to the shocked man: “I feel horrible about what happened. I’m so sorry.” With that, the two men encouraged each other.

I asked Kenichi Ohmae, a global management consultant, if he could sense whether a company was going to be successful. Was there something he could smell or sense when he was in an organization that suggested this company was going to be a winner? He said, “Yes,” and added “if a company is not afraid to ask questions, if everyone asks questions from the CEO down to the office boy, if they ask questions like ‘Why do we do it this way?’ then this company will succeed.” So the inquisitive mind is an essential ingredient for future success.

This is echoed by Susan Greenfield, a British scientist. She confirmed the need to old practices. She wanted to deliver the message to budding young scientists that searching for the new possibilities with the inquisitive mind would be essential to be successful. And she said, “Never take anything for granted: always question everything. Always question old practices. Look at the evidence and if you are not satisfied with it, you can see an alternative. You have to question the out-of-date ideas.”

(A) Anna, a 9-year-old girl, finished attending elementary school till 4th grade at a small village. For the 5th grade, she transferred to a school in a city. It was the first day of her school and (a) she went to her new school by bus. All students started going to their classes. She also made it to her classroom after asking fellow students for directions. (B) When everyone except Anna had submitted their answer papers, Ms. Taylor told (b) her, “Dear, write down what you know. It’s fine.” Anna said, “I was thinking that there are so many things. I don’t know which seven I can pick to write.” Eventually, she handed her answer paper to Ms. Taylor. The teacher started reading her students’ answers aloud and the majority had answered them correctly such as The Great Wall of China, Colosseum, Stonehenge, etc. (C) At last Ms. Taylor picked up Anna’s answer paper and started reading. “The Seven Wonders are—To be able to See, To be able to Hear, To be able to Feel, To Laugh, To Think, To be Kind, To Love!” After reading Anna’s answer, (c) she was touched and all her students were also deeply moved. Today, a girl from a small village reminded them about the precious gifts, truly a wonder, which they already knew but easily forgot. (D) Upon seeing Anna’s simple clothing and knowing (d) she was from a small village, some students in the classroom started making fun of her. Ms. Taylor, Anna’s new homeroom teacher, soon arrived and introduced (e) her to the class and said that she would be studying with them. Then the teacher told the students to be ready for the surprise test now! She told everyone to write down the Seven Wonders of the world. Everyone started writing the answer to the unexpected test quickly.
